

Dott.ssa Luana Voto

Nutritionist Biologist, PhD Student

Dr. Luana Voto is a Nutritionist Biologist, PhD student in Food Science. She graduated from University of Rome "Tor Vergata" and she is following his PhD path at University of Naples "Federico II".

She is author of 2 publications among scientific paper on international journals, She has focused her researcher activity in the area of pediatric food allergy at the Department of Translational Medical Science, University "Federico II" of Naples. Her research activity is the basis of an interdisciplinary research and a highly integrated clinical research program to better understand the pathogenic mechanisms of food-induced diseases and provide the best assistance to children suffering from these disorders. Her research activity is based on the study of basic aspects of pathophysiological basis of pediatric food-induced diseases, gut microbiota structure and function analysis. The main study aim of the research activity is focused on the identification of best strategies for the management of pediatric patients affected by food allergies and food intolerances, and for the identification of innovative strategies to induce immune tolerance in children affected by food allergy.